Joy, Love and Sadness in the Visits Hall.

One of the most poignant places in a prison is the visits hall. These are usually fairly featureless places, with maybe a crèche in the corner for young children, where the world outside and the world inside a prison meet. There are groups of chairs around a table, with one chair on its own, for the prisoner, and a group of three for his or her visitors. Around the edge of the hall prison officers maintain a watchful eye, making sure that nothing illegal passes from one to another. It is a place of whispered conversations, of stress sometimes as fragile relationships struggle along, but very often it is a place of love.

It is here that a mother, a daughter, a grandmother, or a partner will look long and hard at the person they have come to visit. They will have known the prisoner long before he or she became a prisoner. And they will know them so well. It could be said of these people that they look steadily at the prisoner and they loved them.

*Of all the words in our gospel this morning, these words about Jesus are deeply moving. A young man, full of ideals, full of energy, full of hope, has heard about this good man who seems so different from other people he may have encountered. He wants to come close to Jesus, to please him, and so he asks what he must do to inherit eternal life. He thought he knew the answers to this question, but maybe he didn't know Jesus as well as he thought. You see, this young man's encounter was with God, with God who knows us through and through and who knows what stands between us an eternal life- in case of this young man his attraction to riches

But does Jesus, seeing into this young man's heart reject him or condemn him? No, the Gospel tells us that, knowing him so well, he looks steadily at him and loves him.

Those who end up in prison, in that visits hall, do so for many complex reasons - maybe through greed, plain and simple, maybe through a love of violence for its own sake, but often the reason why people commit crime are indeed complex. And it is important, if people in prison are to "make all things new" to begin a new life that they stay close to those who known them, to those who love them and who will support them once they are released.

We all need to be challenged about how we lead our lives, about our values and our relationships. Today's gospel should help us to do this. But we also need to support those who find this process so difficult and yet remain loving of those in prison. We need to support the families of people in prison so that we can support those they love in making their lives new again on release.

Please pray for those in prison, that they have an encounter with Jesus Christ and know that they are loved. Please pray for those who love people who are in prison.. Please pray for the work of the Prison Advice and Care trust (Pact) and all those who give real practical support so that loving relationships may be strengthened, even in the somewhat bleak atmosphere of the visits hall.

Written by Fr. Rodger Reade, Catholic Bishops' Prison Adviser.
